Driven – Moving into Connected and Autonomous Vehicles

Driverless vehicles are on the way! The convergence of vehicle-to-vehicle communications, vehicle awareness and automation, adaptive traffic control and traveler information systems will greatly change the way goods and people move through the world. The potential safety and mobility benefits are exciting, but policy and system management questions still need answers. What might this future look like? What risks and unintended consequences might we be facing? What are the engineering, social, and public policy challenges?

Speaker Kyle Garrett is a systems engineer with Synesis Partners, LLC. He is an active participant in the Vehicle-to-Infrastructure Deployment Coalition, and he and Synesis Partners are currently involved in several connected vehicle projects with various state and local agencies.
